

33 years and still hot!

HOT OFF THE PRESS INC.

After 33 years Hot Off The Press is still going strong and president Paulette Jarvey is still bursting with new ideas. Stephanie de Geus spoke with her about the past three decades

With 14 different categories of craft supplies, this American company has built up quite a range of different products over the years. This is something president Paulette Jarvey never expected when she started working on her first craft book in the late 1970s. "I started working on a book about dough art called You Can Do It! It took me four years to complete the 96-page book. We took all the step-by-step photos at our kitchen table and my husband developed them in our bathroom. So we really started at the preverbal kitchen table! When I gave the copy to the printer I asked him if he would put it away in a safe and he assured me he would. We still use the same printer and it was only years later that he told me it moved from his desk to his bottom drawer!" she laughs.

The first book was released in 1980 and things took off from there. "I designed the first five books about dough art, after that other people started to get involved and we started to publish work from other authors. We even got manufacturers who commissioned us to do books for them."

Instinct and opportunity

In the past 33 years the company has transformed from a kitchen-based family business into a large company with a wide range of products. "A lot of my decisions were based on gut instinct and so far it hasn't led me astray — I really do trust my gut instinct."

"Almost all of those decisions came naturally and all we had to do was decide whether or not to pursue it when a new opportunity arose.

Paulette Jarvey

We decided to turn HOTP into a real business when we started working with other authors. At that point we had to hire people and pay them. That was a lot of responsibility!"

It all spiralled from there. "When I started I didn't know anything about the industry, I didn't even know there was an industry. Other manufacturers started asking if we would produce books for them and we had to decide if we were going to do that or keep on doing our own titles. We decided to do both. From that point onwards, big brands started to get on board. Brands like Hallmark wanted to use our expertise in educating the people. It had lovely products, but didn't know how to teach people how to use the products. That really grew the business and that year we started with three employers and finished with 13."

HOTP also started working with Fiskars. "The company wanted us to do a book on using its patterned-edged scissors. Around that time I went to one of those Creative Memories home parties and saw what they were doing using the scissors. We created the Snip Your Snapshots books before the term scrapbooking was even invented. The book sold 50,000 copies in the first six months alone."

From there they started building on crafting with photos. They started to create books with papers that co-ordinated with each other and contained ideas within the books using the papers. "We called the line Paper Pizzazz. Michaels, a craft store chain in the US, committed to 10 of these books if we could have everything ready within three months. And we did. We shipped everything on the 16th of December 1996. That next year at the HAH show we were the only company showcasing these types of products."

"My husband and I had an agreement that if my salary matched his, he could quit his job. It took me a while though before I started taking a wage. I was handling the finances of our family and it took a while before I told him that my salary matched his and he quit his job!" Paulette laughs. "He came to work for HOTP and started automating a lot of processes and set up our website. So it did have its benefits. We do joke about it, that our offices are on separate floors in our building at the opposite ends, so we're as far away as possible and not really working together."

Paperwishes

Another big change for HOTP came in 2002. "We were originally a company that sold to other retailers and we noticed that in between it got filtered and not every retailer had everything in stock. Since we now have such a huge range of products, we started creating catalogues and sending those out to customers who had been asking about it in the past. It was a huge success! So we started our website as well. Now www.paperwishes.com has grown into a large part of our business that sells directly to the customers."

The staff are a close-knit bunch

The website does more than just selling its products. It also does what the company does best – teaching people. "We do weekly webisodes where we show people ideas and inspiration to use our products. Online and apps really are the way forward. The information is available for the customer whenever they want."

"I do think the internet is the future", says Paulette. "At the moment we're only doing books when manufacturers request it. We have, however, completely switched to online and webisodes. It really is a great way to teach and inspire people, and that's something we will continue to keep doing."
